How to Choose Your Kentwood Floor

Choosing hardwood flooring for your home or workplace is a hands-on decision, with many things to consider including color, style, finish and everyday performance. It is an investment and a choice you'll enjoy for many years. We understand and we're here to help. Here's a few things to consider as you browse our selection of Kentwood floors.

Engineered or solid? In recent years, engineered floors have grown in popularity over traditional solid wood floors for several reasons, particularly the wide array of styles, widths and designs. Engineered floors are made with a veneer of hardwood on the surface, glued to a platform of plywood or softwood strips, rather than a single, solid piece of wood. As a result they are more stable and react less to changes in heat and humidity, and can be used below ground and over concrete. They're also more environmentally friendly, as most of the product is composed of common softwood, not scarcer hardwood.

Brushed, distressed or sculpted? Textured surface treatments are popular and practical. Popular because they enhance the character and aesthetic of the floor surface, practical because they show day-to-day wear and tear less than a smooth surface.

How important is the finish? Very. Floors endure a lot of traffic, and the finish takes all that wear and protects the hardwood below. Kentwood floors are finished with multiple applications of polyurethane,* with ingredients like aluminum oxide added to improve durability. Our finishes are tested regularly to ensure they are meeting our rigorous specifications for scratch resistance, and other wear factors.

Is wood hardness important? Not really, especially in an engineered floor where only the surface layer is hardwood, but it's a common question when shopping for hardwood flooring. We recommend you choose a product based on the visual character of the wood and how it fits into your project or lifestyle, not a Janka wood hardness rating.

Are they easy to clean? Polyurethane finished floors are very easily maintained with routine sweeping or vacuuming and occasional cleaning with an approved agent like our Therapy by Kentwood cleanser. You can find complete care and maintenance information at kentwoodfloors.com.

Can I install them myself? It can look easy on TV, but it's a highly skilled craft. We recommend using a professional hardwood installer for best results. Your Kentwood dealer can arrange installation services for you.

Are they easily damaged? Any wood floor can be damaged if struck or scratched with sufficient force. Life happens and things get dropped, but prevention is the best remedy. Touch-up kits and fillers are available to repair minor nicks, dents and scratches.

Does the thickness of the floor matter? Engineered floors are usually between 1/2" and 5/8" thick, with a few 3/4" options. A thicker profile will add some additional weight and stability to the flooring assembly, but it will not have any effect on the floor's performance or appearance.

What's the benefit of wide planks? Design trends and manufacturing innovations have led to floors with ever-wider planks, with eight and nine inch options quite common. The wide plank look is an aesthetic choice, providing a cleaner showcase for the wood's character with less visual interruption and fewer seams.

What is the warranty? Kentwood floors all carry a lifetime manufacturing warranty and a finish wear warranty of 35 years.* For more information, please consult the product warranty at kentwoodfloors.com.

Our Commitment: Clean Floors

When choosing a new hardwood floor for your home, you are naturally concerned with the floor's appearance. The variety of the wood, the color, grain patterns, surface textures and widths of the planks are key ingredients to be considered in selecting your ideal floor.

Kentwood floors are manufactured by Metropolitan, and we are obsessed with every detail within our floors. We've been helping customers choose fine quality flooring for over 25 years. In that time, our commitment to our values, doing things right the first time and our customers' satisfaction has led us to develop a quality assurance and environmental compliance program to help educate our customers and which serves as a model for our industry, a program we call Clean Floors.

Trust and transparency go hand in hand, and our commitment to verified performance standards, authentic environmental declarations and ethical sourcing and manufacturing runs deep. By sharing information about our quality control process protocols, we invite you to make an informed decision.

Verified Performance Standards:

Our comprehensive Quality Control program monitors every stage of production and subjects all our products to inspection throughout the manufacturing process; our hardwood floors typically undergo more than thirty documented QC checks. We routinely have our finishes, adhesives and other inputs tested by third parties to verify they are performing as required. All this results in a product of superior quality and performance, greater efficiency, easier to maintain and less waste during installation.

Environmental Claims:

The air we breathe indoors matters, and Metropolitan has long been a leader in applying strict emissions control standards to our products. In addition to meeting regulated standards such as CARB and TSCA Title VI, our products are voluntarily tested and certified on an ongoing basis to meet CA Section 01350 and UL's GREENGUARD Gold, two of the strictest emissions standards in the world.

Ethically Sourced and Manufactured:

Knowing where your hardwood floor came from, and what's gone into making it can give you peace of mind for years to come. Our dedicated Environmental Compliance team oversees all aspects of our supply chain to ensure the integrity of all our operations. Our reputation is such that the World Wildlife Federation (WWF) partnered with Metropolitan in a field study investigating the illegal harvest and trade of white oak in Russia.

We believe that the more you know about what goes into our products, the more confident and comfortable you will be in selecting Kentwood for your home. Choosing Kentwood ensures a carefully designed, responsibly crafted and naturally beautiful floor that will maintain its enduring quality for a lifetime.

Brushed Oak Whisker
Andi Marhsall Photography

This residence by Alturas Homes can best be described as 'Northwest Modern'. Designer Lauren Smyth paired industrial finishes with clean lines for an inviting and stylish ambience. The contrast in finishes, from black steel to white walls, creates a striking and memorable interior. The choice of Brushed Oak Whisker from the Plateau Collection keeps the space bright and natural, with just enough character to match the industrial elements.

Feature Profile: Vancouver House

With its precarious profile and twisting facades, Vancouver House has become an instant icon on the city's skyline. Developed to take advantage of a uniquely challenging slice of real estate at the base of the city's bustling Granville Street Bridge, the tower rises from its narrow context among on-ramps and bridge supports to claim a dynamic position as the gateway to the city.

Conceived by architect Bjarke Ingels as an example of 'gesamtkunstwerk' — the city building as a total work of art — Vancouver House anchors a vibrant new community that will include workspaces, retail, hospitality, shops and more. Complementing the sculptural presence of the tower in the sky is an emphasis on public art and gathering places at street level. Green roofs on the surrounding buildings create the calming effect of an urban meadow amongst the layered concrete approaches to the bridge.

“Think of Vancouver House as a giant curtain being pulled back to reveal the world to Vancouver and Vancouver to the world”

– Bjarke Ingels

Custom Brushed Oak Herringbone

The homes of Vancouver House boast some of the most dramatic views in the city, but the interiors offer drama aplenty as well. From kitchen islands that appear almost to levitate to copper cladding that shimmers with reflected light, the interior spaces are as innovatively and intricately designed as the building's pixelated façade.

For the penthouse suites, the designers at Dialog worked with Kentwood's product team to create a custom herringbone in natural brushed oak. The flooring adds a classic element to the bold, futuristic vision of the building and the sweeping natural beauty of its setting.

Brushed Oak Lynnwood
